Wells fans will not be disappointed by this new full colour version of an old favourite about the frustrations of being a middle mouse-child. Whenever Nora wants parental attention it seems to be focused upon younger brother Jack or elder sister Kate. Nora's inventive and mischievous attempts to seek attention are warmly captured in both drawing and text: from hiding chess pieces and scattering marbles to flying the kite indoors. Her final disappearing act turns the house suitably upside down! However, the Americanisms of the text will not appeal to some readers - 'Jack had gotten filthy', and coupling 'mum' and 'dumb', 'trash' and 'crash' - but the overall rhyme and rhythm of the book make for uncomplicated, fun bedtime reading.
