'The trouble with you recounts --- you can't see a good thing when it's staring you in the face' --- so speaks Jack Brady, Falcon Island's answer to Joe Grundy. His threat to mine the ilumenite on his land occasions dissension and skullduggery in an antipodean backwater. Fortunately there is a band of kids, aided by a dutchman in exile, who are going to make last minute discoveries of historical proportions and save the situation. If this sounds like the script of an imported TV serial for children, that is just what it is --- rewritten as a novel. When it reaches our screens it will probably be worth a copy or two in the bookshop. Otherwise there are better adventure stories around.
