Barney loves to draw, especially on walls, so when he learns of an attempt on the record for the longest pavement drawing in the world he can't wait to get started. The problem is that his pitch is outside Mrs Winkey's shop and she won't allow him to draw anything. So Barney's plans for a huge elephant have to be abandoned. But thanks to some imaginative thinking inspired by his grandmother's beanstalk he manages to get around the problem - literally. Sylvia Fair's longish story picture book with its wealth of pavement artistry is a treat to look at and the story idea is a clever one. However, there seem to be several places where the textual cohesion is lost and I had to check that I had not turned over two pages by mistake.
