Michael Hardcastle's 100th published title dwells largely upon a host of hopeful youngsters training themselves for the running, cycling, throwing and jumping of Amerton Rival's very own Olympics, in honour of a local high-jumping hero. Play to win but play fair, and total dedication to your chosen sport will bring the rewards of medals and acclaim, seem to be the predominant messages in this rather over-populated book that might allure the sports mad, but might not have enough suspense to keep them reading to the end.
