Six and seven year-olds giggled with pure enjoyment at 'Em's Empty Egg' and a host more. They loved the language and rhythms, related immediately to the subject-matter and begged to see every one of Satoshi Kitamura's clear and funny illustrations. Using the voices of three children, aged six, four and one-and-a-half, on subjects from falling down and eating to punching little brother and fishing, these poems stimulated valuable discussion and had huge appeal. I'm sure they'll be read again and again.
