This is a delightful way to learn about East Africa and the Masai, for through the intimacy of first-person narrative daily events of the inner city are recounted and 'If I were ...' considerations shared. Between the wonderful language and illustrations, which make obvious the genuine affinity between both worlds, and the spontaneous, almost greedy childlike curiosity about how the Masai eat, sleep, get ready for parties and dress for PE, this book is absolutely addictive and even exhausting. There's real beauty in its sensitivity and simplicity. It will undoubtedly involve young and old and can also be used legitimately as part of the Geography National Curriculum.
